The Signal Companies traced their history to the Signal Gasoline company, founded by Samuel B. Mosher in 1922. It renamed itself to Signal Gas & Oil in 1928 to reflect its expanding businesses; by the 1950s, Signal was the largest independent oil company on the West Coast of the United States and Mosher held large stakes in American President Lines and Flying Tiger Line. In 1964, Signal merged with the Garrett Corporation, an aerospace company, and the combined company adopted "The Signal Companies" as its corporate name in 1968. < http://www.mediaheritage.com/signal-oil-history/>

The "Signal Gasoline Company" began in 1922 when farmer Samuel B. Mosher apparently started his first filling station. Mosher must have possessed strong entrepreneurial skills as the operation quickly grew during the "Roaring Twenties" and in 1928 was renamed "Signal Gas and Oil". In 1931, Signal entered into a partnership with the gasoline and oil giant, the "Standard Oil Company."
Signal eventually grew to be the largest independent oil company on the West Coast, which is where this publicity photograph was likely taken. The lead photo in addition to the filling station contains a Signal Gasoline tank truck, and in the background on either side an automobile repair operation. < http://theoldmotor.com/?p=151093>.
